A must for any administrator not fully up to date with modern copyright lawBy Midwest Book ReviewCopyright law is a thin line to toe in the world where money is tight - such as public schools. "Smart Copyright Compliance for Schools" is the educational administrator's guide to the confusing world of copyright law. With entertainment companies like the MPAA and RIAA going after suspected media pirates more fiercely than ever, not breaking these laws is key to avoiding a headache and a loss of much of the school's funds to lawsuits. Author Rebecca P. Butler explains the copyright laws a school will run into with much detail, and explains how to do everything the legal way while still doing what teachers want to do. "Smart Copyright Compliance in Schools" is enhanced with indexes and helpful quick references for readers, making it a must for any administrator not fully up to date with modern copyright law.

"not just another library-related guide to copyright law. This title will be useful to anyone wishing to institute formal copyright compliance procedures, and is recommended for the professional collections at secondary schools and for libraries at schools of library science." --Catholic Library World, March 2010 "The book is geared toward K-12 school districts, but would definitely be a valued addition to school teachers', librarians', and curriculum coordinators' reading lists. It is a must-have addition for school libraries, and a welcome resource for public libraries. The material is well-organized with excellent content section, list of figures, and in-depth analysis." --Library Collections, Acquisitions, and Technical Services, 2010
