Adoption: Individuals, States, and Agencies across Borders:

This book expands our understanding of a growing, yet largely unstudied phenomenon: the flow of children across borders through intercountry adoption. What explains the spread of intercountry adoption through the international system over time? McBride investigates the interconnected networks of states, individuals, and adoption agencies that have collaborated to develop the practice of intercountry adoption we see today. This book tells the story of how adoption agencies mediate between individuals and states in two ways: first by teaching states about intercountry adoption as a policy, and second by helping states implement intercountry adoption as a practice. McBride argues that this process of states learning about intercountry adoption from adoption agencies has facilitated the global development of the practice in the past seventy years.

'This study, which makes an important scholarly contribution to a neglected area of international relations, is recommended for all academic libraries ... Highly recommended.' M. Amstutz, Choice
About the Author
Becca McBride is Assistant Professor of Political Science and International Relations at Calvin College, Michigan, where she teaches courses on international relations and comparative politics. She holds a PhD from Vanderbilt University, Tennessee in International Relations and an MA from Georgetown University, Washington DC in Russian and East European Affairs; she is currently working on a MEd in Curriculum and Instruction.
